A person who gives clever solutions to a problem is Charles, my English speaking teacher. We had a close relationship and always studied together. His English is amazingly fluent and always taught me English.

From what I can recall, when we were in high school. My English hindered/lowered my scores a lot.... especially grammar and pronunciation which was a real problem for me.

At that time, he came up with an idea of imitating accents of people from different countries speaking English vocabs, and he recorded himself speaking them with different accents.....What I have to do was to pick the one that was being pronounced correctly. Not only that, he simplified complicated ideas and explained it in a down to earth way so I'm always awake in his class as it's never boring. Not only that, he explains grammar tenses in a really funny way. He never recommends his students to memorize complicated grammar rules.

With his help, I just found it is not that much difficult for me to pronounce new words, and greatly improved my speaking ability. His lectures hooked my interests in English and build up my confidence to speak in front of my friends and improved my overall speaking skills.

I 'm really appreciative of him and thanked him a million. And his idea was quite clever and practical.
