

A decision that I disagreed with happened last month, when my friend Alice called me up and told me to have a try of the Spaghetti she had made.

Although I'm quite confident with my stomach, I decided to refuse her generosity as I didn't want go to the community hospital. Long story short, this wasn't the first time Alice told me to go try her Spaghetti.

A few years ago, Alice fell in love with cooking, and she'll cook a new dish every weekend, and I'll always be the first one to try it. I forgot how many times I had a sick stomach and felt ill after eating her "home - made recipe". It was a terrible experience.

I later convinced her to go to a local coffee bar by corner of the block where I lived in called Fang Zhang. Anyway, the food they serve there great like Oyster Pancakes, Kimchi Hotpots, Hamburgers, Tacos and Sandwiches and for desserts they've got coconut cookies and strawberry cakes.

I decided to order the tacos, because I never tried it before, and it was actually quite scrumptious!

It looked a little bit crispy because of the tortilla shell and the stuff inside like beef, tomatoes, carrots and cheese were seasoned with exotic herbs and spices. It was quite different from Chinese food. However it's high in calories.

Alice and I had a great time over at the café, and we've chit chatted for the whole afternoon.

